

One important discovery that I made as I researched what became my Honors thesis was this: when you request a text on PALCI E-ZBorrow and, instead of the text you expect, you receive a small box with a filmstrip in it which seems as though it should be played on an old 8mm projector, do not panic, this can be elucidated for you by the microfilm readers located on the second floor of the library. These machines may seem as though they are from the Stone Age, but they do still work, granted you read the di

During my research I took notes on bookmarks, color coding them for each section of the process, noting the bibliographical information and then the citation. What surprised me when I began to write was that even with this preparation I was not prepared. The problem was that I had not contextualized the project within the greater realm of English research. With this realized I returned to researching theoretical definitions, and was then able to compose my research paper.